CUARTORS NOTES

I am honoured to be invited as the Watershed Studio Residency program's curator, as I aid them in the development of their debut digital exhibition. As individuals with the luxury and privilege of access to digital spaces, it's imperative that we create accessible forms of fine art and actively work to dismantle the socio-economic barriers that prevent many from enjoying work as divine as this exhibition.

This group exhibition features 25 international multidisciplinary artists and displays the wealth of talent that is brought together by the Watershed Residency program. The residency itself is a space that has allowed each one of these artists to harness their practice with guidance from the residency advisor Grace O'Malley. We are excited to host works from across the world including Italy, China, and Germany. As illustrated within this exhibition, Watershed Studio has provided a safe space for diverse and their artistic development.

Working alongside the Watershed artists was immensely valuable as I was exposed to the vast versatility of their artwork. Georgia Green, a featured artist, has taken the cover of this catalogue as her work is an accurate depiction of the calibre of this residency. Though visually stimulating, the context and material of Green's prints are what stand out from the other artists. If you're unfamiliar with the Watershed Residency experience, you might not recognize that the native plants within these prints grow within the fields just outside the studio, or the forest that stretches into the sky is only meters away from the back door. The pastel drawings on monoprints are a whimsical delicacy that start to feel like the beginning of a fairy tale. The environment created within Watershed's walls has allowed for art like this to exist. This exhibition space is also home to Michael Kunzinger's ink-drawing-like photography that captures the water of Galway, and Luara Kirons sublime works that explore more historic sites within the country's history. It's even taken in Deirbhile Seville's hand-sewn canines that situate themselves across notable spaces within Ireland. With 21 other artists remaining on the walls, I invite you to turn these pages, explore the gallery space, and witness the stunning results of this residency's hard work.

Each wall is adorned with a new approach to the fine arts and I would like to formally congratulate all of the artists for their phenomenal creations. I look forward to watching this exhibit grow as the residency continues to welcome new residents.
